REVISION DATE: FEBRUARY 2020

What are Community Residential Centers?

- A transitional housing initiative, formerly identified as independent housing, launched by the Department of Rehabilitation and Correction in January 2004.
- The Bureau of Community Sanctions (BCS) has licensed contractors in the following cities: Akron, Canton, Chillicothe, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Greenville, Hamilton, Lima, Mansfield, Sidney and Toledo. The facilities provide temporary, transitional housing and some limited case management for offenders under Adult Parole Authority and Common Pleas Court supervision.
- The Department will pay for residence in these facilities for up to 90 days for eligible offenders
 - If the agency and parole/probation officer request an extension of the 90-days due to extenuating circumstances, i.e. applying for SSI, etc. the BCS Assistant Chief or designee will review that request and may grant an extension as appropriate.

Which offenders are eligible for Community Residential Centers?

- TC offenders eligible for step-down to electronic monitoring and Adult Parole Authority and Common Pleas Court supervised offenders with no viable home placement that are at risk of being homeless. This includes offenders residing in homeless shelters.
- Moderate to low risk/lower need offenders with little or no programming needs other than housing.
- Higher risk/higher need offenders who have successfully completed adequate programming in prison, a halfway house, or through a community agency (or are currently involved in programming in the community) and are stabilized, but would still benefit from housing assistance due to not having a home placement. TC offenders must be continuously monitored via GPS.

Then how does a Community Residential Center help?

- Transitional housing frees up valuable, limited, and more costly halfway house beds for higher risk/higher need offenders in immediate need of residential programming.
- Recent evaluations conducted by the University of Cincinnati clearly demonstrate that halfway houses reduce recidivism for high risk/high need offenders and increase recidivism for moderate to low risk/low need offenders.

What is the difference between a Community Residential Center and a Halfway House?

- The Department of Rehabilitation and Correction contracts with the Community Residential Center to provide housing, some limited monitoring and basic case management services.
 - Agencies are not expected to provide meals, but a facility for food preparation and storage.
 - The supervising authority is responsible for linking offenders with any additional programming they may require, however, if informed of the supervising officer's requirements, the staff at the Community Residential Center may assist in monitoring the offender's demeanor and attendance at required appointments, meetings, etc.
 - Residence is voluntary. If the offender walks away, he or she is subject to a sanction for failing to notify the supervising officer of a change of address. TC offenders are still subject to escape charges.
 - A referral is not a sanction or treatment alternative.
 - No additional certification or licensure, beyond being licensed by the Division of Parole and Community Services is required.
- The Department of Rehabilitation and Correction contracts with Halfway House agencies to provide housing, food, case management services, residential programming and in some cases, intensive treatment services.
 - Halfway houses are required to provide and prepare meals for offenders.
 - Halfway houses are required to more closely monitor the movements of offenders through itineraries, sign-out sheets, visitor records, search logs, etc.
 - While the supervising authority may sometimes need to assist halfway houses in locating services for offenders that are outside the agency's contracted requirements, halfway houses are generally required by contract to provide residential programming or community referrals for offenders placed within their agency.
 - Residence in and successful completion of a halfway house is mandatory. If the offender walks away, he or she may be charged with Escape under the Ohio Revised Code.
 - Halfway house placement is a sanction, condition, or treatment alternative.
 - Halfway houses are required to obtain and continuously maintain American Correctional Association (ACA) accreditation.

How does an offender get referred to a Community Residential Center?

- Institution referral
 - Parent institution staff shall list, as a placement plan, a Community Residential Center.
 - BCS Parole Program Specialists will review the packet and assist in placing the offender in the most appropriate Community Residential Center by area and admission criteria.
- Field Referral
 - APA Supervised Sex Offenders
 - APA supervising officer shall complete a referral form and forward it to the APA Region's Sex Offender Specialist where the Community Residential Center is located. The APA Sex Offender Specialist shall determine if the offender is appropriate for referral, and if so, make the referral to the Community Residential Center.
 - All Other APA Supervised Offenders
 - Supervising officer shall complete a referral form and forward it to the BCS, who shall determine if the offender is appropriate for referral, and if so, make the referral to the Community Residential Center.
 - Court Supervised Offenders
 - Probation Officer shall complete a referral form and forward it to the Community Residential Center Intake Coordinator to determine if the offender is appropriate for admission. If so, the Intake Coordinator will establish a date of admission.
 - Referral Requirements
 - In order to complete appropriate intake on field referrals, Community Residential Centers will require completion of the Community Residential Center referral form and attach a copy of a current investigation report (i.e., pre-sentence investigation).
